About the Book:

“After receiving a multitude of calls from principals, teachers, and administrators who wanted to know more about what we were doing that caused us to become successful, I decided to assemble some of the organizational activities and strategies that were used in this process. The result is this practical handbook designed to: (1) share some of the strategies that resulted in the development of effective teachers, successful students, and markedly improved achievement test scores; (2) provide principals with ideas to help lead their schools to better success; (3) provide teachers with documented effective instructional expectations; (4) provide parents, community, business and industry with a description of practices to look for in a well run school; and (5) identify to business and community groups what they can do to help build stronger schools.”

About the Author:

Dr. Vivian Carter Dillihunt served in a large urban school system for over three decades. She continues to share the educational knowledge and expertise gained during her career as a teacher, counselor, instructional supervisor, principal, and district level administrator by coaching principals across the country and presenting at seminars and national conferences. Dr. Dillihunt’s passion for education has been featured in a number of magazine and newspaper articles, as well as in Samuel Casey Carter’s book from The Heritage Foundation, No Excuses – Lessons from 21 High Performing, High Poverty Schools.
